History «FASSBIND»

820 years ago, the Vazpind, who - as the name "barrel binder" suggests - practiced the profession of cooper - moved from Holland to Switzerland. At the Zugersee, where the Fassbind then moved in 1395, the cultivation of cherry trees developed during this time. At that time, the trees and their fruits were considered common property, even if they were planted by private individuals. Cherry wood was in demand as fuel and building material. For this reason, the authorities banned some forest areas and sentenced "wood trespassers" to prison or large fines. According to a retelling from 1886, the "Zuger Chriesisturm" consisted of the citizens running to the Zug commons with their ladders at the sound of the bell, placing them on the state-owned trees and being allowed to pick the fresh cherries.

In the family chronicle it can be read that the Fassbind use the knowledge of alchemy practiced in many monasteries for the production of their cherry. In 1846, at the age of 17, Gottfried Fassbind II founded the "Godefroi Fassbind, jeune, Distillerie de Kirschwasser" in the village of Oberarth, at the foot of the Rigi. That was the beginning of the centuries-old success story of Switzerland's oldest distillery. According to the chronicle, Fassbind fruit brandies have won many awards and medals at national and international exhibitions and continue to win them to this day: Whether in Italy, where in 1860 King Vittorio Emanuele II at the medal ceremony for the statement «La vita è più bella con il Kirsch Fassbind», or at the World Exhibition in London in 1862 Queen Victoria remarked very dryly «Very fruity this Fassbind Kirsch, is it not?» and in Austria around 1873, where Emperor Franz Josef I exclaimed enthusiastically to the crowd, "He's smart, the Fassbind Kirsch", and the Russian Tsar Nicholas II couldn't find the words for so much enjoyment that he made Fassbind his house brandy.
